Get Dialed In To Knowledge

While your students are expanding their minds, bacteria is expanding its reach. Desktop surfaces, doorknobs, workstations and lab equipment all act as superhighways for the spread of harmful bacteria. Creating a culture of hygiene while your students are young can make a dramatic difference. In fact, the simple act of regular hand washing is an important tactic in preventing one from getting sick with illnesses like the flu, as well as decreasing the risk of getting others sick.

When it comes to protecting your students, faculty and staff, knowledge is power.

Get Dialed In To Hand Hygiene

One of the easiest, and most effective ways to prevent the spread of bacteria is through hand washing and sanitizing. Regular hand washing, especially after using the restroom and before eating, can reduce the chances of getting sick with diarrhea up to 40%, and can reduce the risks of catching colds and other respiratory illnesses up to 21%. Providing easy to use, convenient hand hygiene options in common areas like restrooms and cafeterias can make all the difference.

There's nothing common about protecting those in your common areas.

One of the fundamental skills athletes learn in sports is passing the ball. Unfortunately, they're also passing harmful bacteria every time they step into the gym, locker room, physical therapy or training room. With the average American child contracting 6.5 colds a year, each lasting three to five days, it's vital your students, faculty, staff and fans have the body and hand hygiene products they need to fight the spread of bacteria.

From hand sanitizers to foaming soaps to whole body washes, providing superior hygiene options is always a winning strategy.
